ABSTRACT

This study aims to develop an inclusive methodology that uses Chilean national statistical data and geographic information system (QGIS) technology to identify the best spots in urban areas for implementing green infrastructure, focusing particularly on Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR). The main goal is to improve water resource management and support sustainable urban development. This information will be cross-referenced and followed by steps outlined in a guideline created in Excel, which can be applied using the same logic in QGIS and with national data.

The proposed methodology in this research utilizes various statistical indicators, insights for the study from official statistical Chilean national institutions which measure urban density, housing density, land use public/private and topography flooding areas. By systematically cross-referencing these datasets, the study aims to provide valuable insights to urban planners and policymakers, helping them strategically place green infrastructure projects to enhance water resource management effectiveness and strengthen resilience in urban areas.

Using this methodology in green infrastructure planning or urban development has the potential to produce diverse outcomes, which can be classified into different impact levels:

1. Increase in water aquifer recharge volume.

2. Evaluation of green infrastructure impacts: Efficiency of purifying water, and secondly, additional benefits like reducing air pollution.

3. Measurement of the percentage impact on the population benefiting from green infrastructure implementations.

This detailed categorization of results is expected to enrich discussions on green infrastructure planning and urban resilience, providing stakeholders with a practical framework for assessing and improving interventions aimed at sustainable urban development.

Impact level detail:

Increase in water aquifer recharge volume: The main goal of this study on Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR) is water storage. It's a crucial pillar for MAR, ensuring long-term water security, resilience against droughts, and sustainable water management.

1. Enhancing Water Security: With global water stress rising due to population growth and climate change, MAR helps by storing water in aquifers. This stored water acts as a reserve during scarcity or emergencies, especially during droughts.

2. Building Resilience Against Droughts: Droughts, worsened by climate change, can devastate communities and ecosystems. Aquifer storage buffers against droughts, providing water when surface sources are low, helping communities recover faster.

3. Sustainable Water Management: MAR promotes a cyclical approach to water, storing, using, and replenishing it. This reduces reliance on unsustainable groundwater extraction and promotes water reuse.

4. Managing Seasonal Variability: Water availability varies seasonally due to rainfall and evaporation. MAR manages these fluctuations by storing excess water in aquifers during wet periods for use in dry times.

5. Environmental and Ecosystem Benefits: MAR's water storage supports healthy ecosystems and biodiversity, benefiting both people and nature.

This approach ensures efficient water use, balancing today's needs with future sustainability. Additionally, MAR can help in managing stormwater runoff and preventing flooding by directing excess water into aquifers, thereby reducing environmental hazards and enhancing ecosystem resilience[1].

Evaluation of green infrastructure impacts: Efficiency of purifying water, and secondly, additional urban benefits: This part of the Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR) strategy focuses on finding suitable spots to store water, especially in Santiago de Chile's flood-prone areas capable of absorbing water. Soil in these areas can be used to build green infrastructure, like permeable pavements, which help clean and direct stormwater to recharge aquifers.

The middle layer evaluates the impact of green infrastructure on water quality and other benefits like reducing air pollution and improving ecosystems, which all enhance our quality of life. By using national data and Geographic Information Systems (QGIS), we can pinpoint where to place this infrastructure for the most significant impact on water quality and MAR efficiency.

We also assess how well the MAR process cleans water to meet safety standards. This means checking how natural processes like soil filtration remove contaminants from water.

Moreover, green infrastructure helps clean the air by capturing pollutants. QGIS helps us process and understand this data better, aiding decision-making to create healthier urban areas.

Measurement of the percentage impact on the population benefiting from green infrastructure implementations: Assessing the impact of green infrastructure on communities is relevant. By studying national data and Geographic Information Systems (QGIS), we can conduct spatially explicit analyses to pinpoint areas benefiting most from Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR) through green infrastructure. QGIS's capability to integrate multiple data layers facilitates a comprehensive examination of factors like population density, housing distribution, predominant land use, flood-prone zones, and soil suitability for infiltration. By overlaying these datasets, we identify optimal locations for green infrastructure implementation. Subsequently, we estimate the population poised to benefit from improved water management and reduced flood risks. This integrated approach underscores the significance of green infrastructure in enhancing urban water management, MAR, and urban resilience. It emphasizes the need for a spatially informed strategy to target areas and assess the population impact, aligning with the broader objectives of sustainable urban development and effective water resource management.

1. INTRODUCTION

This study aims to develop a methodology using national statistical data and QGIS to identify optimal locations within urban areas for implementing green infrastructure, specifically focusing on MAR (managed aquifer recharge), with the goal of enhancing water resource management and promoting sustainable urban development. This information will be cross-referenced and followed by steps outlined in a guideline created in Excel, which can be applied using the same logic in QGIS and with national data.

The methodology proposed in this research seeks to utilize various statistical indicators including urban density, housing construction density, elevation topography data, mapping of the most recurrent points of flood and water source mapping. By systematically analyzing these datasets, the study aims to provide valuable insights to urban planners and policymakers for strategically locating green infrastructure projects to optimize water resource management and support resilience in urban environments.

This project addresses the disconnect between urban development and ecosystem considerations alongside human needs in large cities and the following side effects of them in current times. Green infrastructure initiatives play a crucial role in sustainable urban development, requiring a balance between human needs and environmental preservation. Understanding the benefits of aligning human activities with natural ecosystems can contribute to improving overall quality of life and the long-term health of ecosystems.

Santiago de Chile, in the past couple of years, has been testifying the acceleration of side effects of degradation of its natural ecosystem. To give context to the situation emergency of the case specifically in the site of research, we citate “The World Resources Institute” (WRI) released a damning report on August 2019, stating that a quarter of the world’s population resides in countries with “extremely high” water stress. According to the report, 17 countries already face “extreme water stress,” a ranking Chile is on the verge of entering, in the 18 positions. Raúl Cordero, an academic at the University of Santiago, in Chile, explains in an interview to the Consejo Politicas de Infraestructura -CPI (Infrastructure Policy Council) that “extreme stress” means water demand exceeds 80% of available resources. Greenpeace reports that about 400,000 Chileans rely on water trucks due to the worsening situation. Chile ranks 18th globally in water stress, and addressing agricultural water use is crucial to managing this crisis[2].

Santiago de Chile, the capital city, is the focus of this project. In March 2022, a severe drought period was experienced by the city, which has a population of over 8 million. The newspaper Clarin from Spain informed about a protocol to about to be implemented to limit basic water supply hours per day due to historical low reservoir levels. Few months later, flooding in remarkable areas was faced by the city due to issues with one of its main water sources, the Mapocho river. This situation was exacerbated by poor maintenance of embankments along the city, resulting in blockages and damage to public infrastructure caused by the accumulation of dust and garbage. The problem was further worsened by the lack of green spaces and the abundance of concrete, which prevented water absorption[3].

Besides climate change, to whom is this problem addressed? The study “Water Transition: The Future of Water in Chile”, presented by a Chilean NGO, identifies the main problems related to water resources: 44% are attributable to failures in water management and governance. No blame is attributed to this problem; on the contrary, it serves as a means to identify where tentative solutions may be sought. This includes not only examining public policies invested in infrastructure but also understanding the extent of governance participation in transferring responsibility to the private sector.

The necessity of addressing projects capable of mitigating negative environmental impacts within urban environments underscores the importance of analyzing projects from a different perspective. This thesis aims to propose a methodology involving various stakeholders to examine the terrain more efficiently[4].

Is this still a landscape architecture task/objective?

The "Landscape and urban planning" International Journal, in an article titled "The Role of Landscape Architecture in Urban Design: Shifting Perspectives and Emerging Trends" propose the idea of landscape architecture plays a crucial role in urban design beyond merely designing surface-level spaces. They highlight the importance of understanding and integrating the subsurface layers, including soil, hydrology, and geological features, into the urban design process[5].

This study finds relevant to explore the relationship between urban development and natural processes, including soil and hydrology, and argues for sustainable urban design practices, as a matter to create adaptability for cities and urban environments[6].

Another source that reenforce the proposal integrating subsurface layers such as soil, hydrology features into urban and landscape design are crucial for sustainable and resilient development is how urbanization impacts aquatic systems and emphasizes the importance of understanding hydrology in urban design to mitigate negative effects on water systems[7].

These references cover a range of topics related to soil, hydrology, and geological features in urban and landscape design, emphasizing their importance for sustainable and resilient development as the relevance to analyze and design the space broader than from wall to wall or in its surface.

Background.

The Mapocho River was analyzed by Tamara Núñez from "Ladera Sur," Chile's environmental and nature media outlet[8]. This analysis was approached from a sociological and historical perspective, aiming to comprehend the ongoing relationship between the river and its inhabitants. By focusing on the current state of soil permeability and its correlation with water bodies, the extent of concrete infrastructure present in the capital city of Chile was sought to be elucidated. In the following, her document will be summarized from the perspective of further aquifer recharge purposes.

The Mapocho River, originating from the El Plomo Hill within the Andes Mountain range in Chile, curves through 16 districts before merging with the Maipo River, the main tributary of Chile's most populous region. This water body has played a pivotal role in sustaining communities since prehistoric times, profoundly shaping the territory as we know it. Despite its historical significance, the river's continuous intervention, channeling, and pollution have degraded its ecosystem, leading to the estrangement of the population from their capital river.

Historically, the Mapocho River has been fundamental for life in the valley, serving as the primary basis for societal development. From the earliest inhabitants who were hunter-gatherer groups to the later agricultural societies, the river's presence influenced settlement patterns and agricultural practices. Particularly noteworthy was the Inca Empire's adept management of water resources, which transformed the landscape significantly, facilitating agricultural productivity through an extensive irrigation network.

The river's capricious nature, characterized by devastating floods and seasonal droughts, posed challenges to the Santiago community throughout history. Efforts to mitigate these risks, such as constructing defenses against river inundations during the colonial period, underscore the complex relationship between society and the river. However, despite its vital role in shaping the city's identity and economic development, the Mapocho River's significance has diminished over time, with pollution and marginalization overshadowing its cultural heritage.

The river, once revered for its life-sustaining properties, is now associated with pollution, poverty, and marginalization, reflecting broader socio-environmental challenges faced by urban communities. While its historical importance persists, the contemporary perception of the Mapocho River reflects societal neglect and environmental degradation, highlighting the need for comprehensive revitalization efforts to restore its cultural and ecological significance.

Before Chile's transition to democracy, customs and systems from various cultures influenced the development of Santiago, notably the expertise in water management and agriculture disseminated by the Inca civilization across Latin America. Despite economic prosperity driven by agriculture, urban settlements in Santiago faced challenges such as extended droughts and sudden mountain snowmelt. Efforts to control nature and accommodate population growth led to significant transformations in the cityscape, yet challenges persist due to climate change and human practices exacerbating flooding and drought issues.

Current Status of the Mapocho River, Santiago

The Mapocho River is one of the main water bodies that runs through Santiago, the capital of Chile. Over the years, the river has faced various challenges related to water quality, flooding levels, flow speed, and pollution. Information on the current status of the Mapocho River is presented below, based on various sources:

Water Quality and Water Intake

- The water quality of the Mapocho River has been a constant concern due to pollution from industrial discharges, solid waste, and untreated wastewater.

- Water intake for human consumption is conducted at specific points along the river, where water quality is monitored to ensure potability[9].

Flooding Levels

The Mapocho River has experienced flooding on several occasions, especially during intense rainy seasons. Measures for flood mitigation and control, such as the construction of defenses and drainage systems have been implemented[10].

Flow Speed

The flow speed of the Mapocho River varies according to the season and weather conditions.

Hydrological studies have been conducted to better understand the river's flow behavior and its impact on nearby urban areas[11].

River Pollution

Pollution of the Mapocho River is a significant issue due to industrial discharges, wastewater, and garbage accumulating in its waters.

Cleaning and decontamination programs have been implemented, along with stricter regulations to control pollution sources[12].

Efforts have been made to improve the Mapocho River's water quality and manage its flooding levels. However, challenges remain in terms of pollution and sustainable management of this water resource. Collaboration between governmental entities, environmental organizations, and the community is essential to address these challenges and promote the revitalization of the Mapocho River as a safe, clean, and accessible space for all residents of Santiago.

1.2. Natural attributes: Santiago the capital and largest city of Chile, lies in the country's central valley, surrounded between the Andes Mountains to the east and the Coastal Range to the west. This topography provides an interesting background, with the Andes offering opportunities tourism for skiing in the winter and hiking in the summer, while the Coastal Range provides a cooler climate.

Santiago host around 7 million people, making it the cultural, political, and economic heart of Chile. Despite its urban setting, Santiago has made efforts to maintain green spaces within the city, including parks like Parque Metropolitano and Parque Forestal, which offer a respite from the city's hustle and bustle.

The city experiences a Mediterranean climate, with hot, dry summers and mild, wet winters. This climate is conducive to a variety of vegetation, from lush parks and gardens to vineyards that produce Chile's renowned wines.

The sclerophyllous forest, also known as the "esclerofic" forest in Chile, is a distinctive ecosystem spanning the central and southern regions of the country. This unique forest type is characterized by its hard-leaved and drought-resistant vegetation, which has evolved to thrive in the Mediterranean-like climate of central Chile. Dominant tree species include the Chilean oak (Nothofagus obliqua), Chilean hazelnut (Gevuina avellana), and Boldo (Peumus boldus), among others, with shrubs and bushes complementing the canopy.[13]

The climate in this region features hot, dry summers and mild, wet winters, to which the vegetation has adapted by developing drought-resistant features such as thick, waxy leaves and deep root systems. This adaptation allows the vegetation to withstand the seasonal climate variations and thrive in the challenging environmental conditions.

[13] Chilean National Forestry Corporation (CONAF)

Biodiversity thrives in the sclerophyllous forest, supporting a rich variety of plant species, birds, mammals, and insects. Many species found here are endemic to the region, adding to its ecological importance. The ecosystem is not only biodiverse but also culturally significant for the indigenous Mapuche people of Chile. They have traditionally utilized the forest's resources for food, medicine, and shelter, practicing sustainable methods that contribute to its conservation.

However, human activities such as logging, agriculture, and urban development have posed threats to the integrity of the sclerophyllous forest. Deforestation and habitat destruction have led to conservation efforts, resulting in the establishment of protected areas and national parks like La Campana National Park, Nahuelbuta National Park, and Los Queules National Reserve. These conservation areas aim to preserve the biodiversity and cultural heritage of the forest, balancing human needs with ecological preservation.

The Mapocho River runs through the city, although it's more of a watercourse than a major water body. However, Santiago's water supply primarily comes from the Maipo River basin and underground aquifers.

Culturally, Santiago is a city with a rich history reflected in its architecture, museums, and neighborhoods. From colonial-era buildings in the city center to modern skyscrapers in Las Condes, Santiago offers a mix of the old and the new, making it a place to explore.

2.RESEARCH PROBLEM, OBJECTIVES AND LAND USE

2.1. Problem: Santiago de Chile is facing significant water management challenges, leading to periods of hydric stress marked by droughts and floods. These fluctuations in water availability are exacerbating the city's water consumption and infrastructure needs.

Hydric Stress and Water Consumption: The city has experienced peaks of droughts due to increased water consumption and demands. These drought conditions strain the city's water resources, affecting both residents and industries, and highlighting the urgency of effective water management strategies.

Flooding and Water Control: Conversely, Santiago also faces periods of flooding, especially during the defrost of mountain water. The city's infrastructure, including its river systems, has been paved and modified to control water flow, which has restricted natural filtration and aquifer recharge capabilities. These modifications have limited the river's ability to naturally filter and enrich the city's aquifers, further exacerbating the water management challenges.

Non-Permeable Areas and Soil Coverage: The city's urban development has resulted in extensive non-permeable areas due to housing, industrial, and commercial concentrations. The high density of soil coverage in these areas prevents natural water infiltration, leading to surface runoff and reduced groundwater recharge. The lack of permeable surfaces and green areas exacerbates water management issues by limiting natural water filtration and purification processes.

Water Contamination and Ecosystem Impact: The combination of non-permeable surfaces, restricted river flow, and limited green areas contributes to water contamination on a large scale. Surface runoff from paved areas carries pollutants, chemicals, and debris into waterways, affecting water quality and ecosystem health.

The degradation of water quality and ecosystem impacts pose significant environmental and public health concerns, highlighting the need for sustainable water management practices.

Integrated Approach to Water Management:

Santiago de Chile's water management challenges are multifaceted, encompassing issues of hydric stress, flooding, non-permeable areas, and water contamination. Addressing these challenges requires an integrated and sustainable approach that promotes natural water filtration, enhances aquifer recharge, reduces flood risk, and protects ecosystem health. Collaborative efforts involving government agencies, communities, and businesses are essential to developing and implementing effective water management strategies that ensure water security, environmental sustainability, and resilience in the face of climate change and urban development pressures.

2.2. Objectives: The current situation requires more control over water sources to prevent extreme shortages and floods is more complex than before. It involves various factors like declining population health, and irreversible damage to ecosystems. This makes it harder to maintain conditions, causing stress in society and putting a big burden on governance.

From the perspective of this thesis, it is considered a mistake to analyze projects involving ecosystems as segregated entities such as architecture, economy, urban development, and landscape architecture. In the case of landscape architects, when the space is analyzed solely among the space walls and the surface of the terrain, the essential aspect of our role, which is to understand the land, is forgotten. A successful environmental project can only be provided by viewing it as an individual entity.

In conclusion, bridging the gap between urban growth and environmental concerns presents a significant challenge for large cities. Addressing this gap is crucial for adaptability and mitigation of negative side effects impacts of urban developments.

2.3. Land use: Urban Planning department - Santiago de Chile. The first step involved considering the main quality of the study, which is the urban built environment and the rural environment, categorized by land use. One of the factors used to create these categories was the delimitation of the research area. In this case, the category is determined by whether the land is divided into two main categories. Areas with fewer than 5,000 inhabitants are considered rural, while areas with 5,001 inhabitants or more, concentrated in one square kilometer, are considered urban.

Categories.

2.3.1. Rural environment: Even if this is not the area of study it helps to delimitate the size of the research in it understanding of the land use.

According to the PMRS – Enclose in the regional area, sub divided into:

Large Non-human intervened areas: These areas typically remain unmodified by humans. A reason for this can range from difficult access, complex topography, a lack of economic output, a natural boundary dividing territories, or secondary for the preservation of natural ecosystems in an effort to preserve special or unique ecosystems like national parks, natural forests.

Large Sacrifice areas: Extensive areas destined to the use of extraction, production and storage with the purpose of providing a use for the needs of the human life model. Such as landfills, areas with intensive agriculture, monocultures for the forestry sector, high ways, roads and the mining of metals, gas, and oil, all of which have a major adverse impact on the area's ecosystem.

2.3.2. Mixed land – urban build environment:

The second step involved defining how the management of water can be visualized based on the purpose of aquifer recharge. To provide context, the amount of rain that can be captured in an area can be measured according to its size. However, the amount of absorption varies depending on whether the area is open or enclosed and the quality of absorption of the soil. For instance, an open land does not have the same area of water absorption surface area as a residential roof condense in rainwater gutters, which concentrates greywater into a few discharge points and often leads to wastage. In summary, areas with permeable surfaces capable of absorbing water will be referred to as "Open space areas," while surfaces without this capability will be termed "Enclosed spaces."

According to the PMRS – The Metropolitan urban area with mixed use can be categorize into[14]:

Open space:

i. Active Material
    1. Public
    2. Private

ii. Inactive Material
    1. Public
    2. Private

Enclose space

iii. Grey Water
    1. Public
    2. Private

Open Space: Seen from the perspective of landscape architecture and for the objectives of this thesis, consists of areas of land intentionally preserved or developed with minimal changes for various purposes like ecological preservation, recreation, and cultural enhancement. In this regard, a crucial role is taken on by landscape architects in the planning, designing, and overseeing of these spaces to ensure they meet both human and environmental needs.

According to the American Society of Landscape Architects (ASLA)[15], open space is defined as "land areas not extensively built upon, such as parks, forests, wetlands, and scenic landscapes, which offer significant ecological, recreational, and aesthetic advantages to both people and wildlife" (American Society of Landscape Architects, 2022). This definition shows the broad nature of open spaces, putting into relevance their ecological value, recreational opportunities, and aesthetic appeal.

Active material.

From the perspective of landscape architecture, refers to areas where the natural surface of the land remains unaltered by human-made structures and materials, allowing for the landscape to develop freely. These areas maintain their ability to absorb water and allow it to seep into the ground, which is crucial for supporting ecological processes and addressing issues like flooding and erosion.

Within landscape architecture, the concept of active material underscores the significance of preserving natural land surfaces to protect ecosystem functionality and promote biodiversity. By refraining from excessive paving or construction that blocks natural drainage and water absorption, environments that are more resilient to environmental challenges and supportive of healthy ecosystems can be created by landscape architects[16].

Public.

In a city context, a public area is defined as any space accessible to the general public and intended for communal use or enjoyment. These spaces, varying from small parks to expansive squares, serve as venues for social interaction, recreation, and cultural activities. The definition draws from the Urban Design Compendium published by the UK Department for Communities and Local Government (2000), which emphasizes the importance of public areas in urban environments for fostering community engagement and enhancing quality of life[17].

For the purpose of the thesis, and supported by the Santiago de Chile Metropolitan Urban Plan in relation to QGIS national data information, the list of active material in open spaces within urban environments is composed of the following elements:

1. Squares
2. Gardens
3. Cemetery
4. Parks
5. Sport fields
6. Recreational areas
7. Botanical Gardens
8. Zoos
9. Tree lines
10. Waterfronts
11. Canalized water bodies
12. Wetlands
13. Lagoons
14. Parking areas

[16] Dinep, C. & Schwab, K. "Sustainable Site Design: Criteria, Process, and Case Studies for Integrating Site and Region in Landscape Design" (2018).

Impact in project.

Knowing if an area is public is important for building green infrastructure because public areas often have resources for projects that are not cross by profit. This type of infrastructure can impact ecosystems and people's health, making life better overall. The list of categories helps find out which lands belong to governments or municipalities. This helps figure out who should build green infrastructure, find money for it, and make it successful.

Private.

Enclosed areas within cities, own by privates and often encompass large volumes of land, primarily driven by profit-oriented motives rather than ecological concerns. These areas usually require local or government approvals for their utilization.

- Barren sites
- Wetlands
- Cemetery
- Sport fields
- Courtyards
- Military areas

Inactive material

Inactive material in open spaces is referred to as areas that have been covered or altered for human purposes, thereby losing their ability to function naturally. These spaces are typically open and not enclosed by walls or structures. When such areas are modified, whether through paving, construction, or other forms of development, their permeability is lost, which is crucial for natural processes to occur. The natural functioning of ecosystems and their ability to retain water are impeded by this[18].

Public.

In a city context, these areas that has have been covered or altered for human purposes, thereby losing their ability to function naturally. Free or charge space accessible to the general public and intended for communal use or enjoyment. A list of them is:

- Parking
- Highway
- Routes / streets
- Sidewalks
- Waterfronts

Private.

Enclosed areas within cities, own by privates' companies and often encompass large volumes of land, primarily driven by profit-oriented motives rather than ecological concerns. These areas usually require local or government approvals for their utilization.

List:

- Parking
- Highway
- Routes / streets
- Large storage concrete surface

Enclose space – grey water.

From a landscape perspective and for research purposes, refers to areas surrounded by walls and a roof, including covered terraces or fully enclosed buildings. Due to their closed nature, these spaces inherently lack the capacity to absorb water. Unlike open areas with permeable surfaces like soil or vegetation, enclosed spaces prevent water from infiltrating into the ground or evaporating naturally. This limitation affects them to be vulnerable to drainage issues and can contribute to urban flooding in areas where water cannot easily permeate the built environment.

Public.

In enclosed spaces refer to properties profit or nonprofit proposes with large roof areas and enclosed walls, where the natural permeability for water has been compromised. Often, these spaces channel rainwater into greywater systems, where improper management can lead to waste accumulation and flooding. These areas are typically used for human activities business or storage purposes, contributing to their significant impact due to the large volume of impermeable surfaces. Consequently, they become vulnerable to drainage issues and can exacerbate urban flooding in areas where water cannot easily penetrate the built environment, ultimately leading to soil degradation.

List:

- Public buildings:
- Office
- School
- Airport

Private.

In enclosed spaces refer to private profit or non-profit properties with large roof areas or large dense housing properties with small green areas, where naturally permeability for water had been compromised. Often, these spaces channel rainwater into greywater systems, where improper management can lead to waste accumulation and flooding. These areas are typically used for human activities business or storage purposes, contributing to their significant impact due to the large volume of impermeable surfaces. Consequently, they become vulnerable to drainage issues and can exacerbate urban flooding in areas where water cannot easily penetrate the built environment, ultimately leading to soil degradation.

They are divided into 3 main categories:

- Commercial:
    - Shopping center
    - skyscraper
    - Office buildings
- Industrial
    - Warehouse
    - Big volume build areas
- Residential:
    - Large residential block buildings
    - Large residential block houses

2.4. Considerations: When we speak about green infrastructure in urban-build environment, it becomes necessary to understand which stakeholders we need to compromise with in the process of making this project something tangible. Collectively will refer to the city as a "SYSTEM", and its main elements as "KEY FACTORS CATEGORIES".

Cities are seen as holistic "systems" comprising multiple interconnected areas. An illustration of this concept is evident in understanding why settlements emerged in particular locations. The explanation often lies in the symbiotic relationship between humans and the ecosystem, where communities developed systems individualized to their circumstances, such as establishing agriculture as an economic foundation. This, in turn, attracted significant human migration, acting as a gravitational force drawing people to inhabit the area. However, as efforts to improve living conditions progressed, the very factors initially promoting prosperity began to pose challenges. Consequently, inhabitants began distancing themselves from the river, covering fertile soil, and reducing its water retention capacity. Consequently, a historical response was to channel water and develop land to enhance comfort in urban environments. Over time, the river and land came to symbolize poverty.

If we mirror the common aspects by then and now, is possible to find the same “key factors categories” the circumstances are the same, the topographical conditions (land use), economic factors, water and concentration of population.

3.METHODOLOGY

The methodology for cross-referencing and filtering various categories using the guideline in QGIS is designed to systematically identify the best locations for green infrastructure development. The step-by-step approach involves several key stages:

Topography appears as the first main filter for spotting best locations to develop green infrastructure, by its nature, it reminds us constantly the point where water naturally get concentrated in focus of flood in the city.

Topography and Flooding Analysis:

- Data Collection: Gather topographical data and drainage patterns, as well as historical flood records.

- Mapping in QGIS: Input the topographical and flooding data into QGIS to visualize areas prone to flooding based on their topographical characteristics.

- Filtering: Use QGIS tools to filter and identify districts (communes) with high flood vulnerability due to topographical features.

Analyzing Flood Risk in Santiago de Chile:

A study conducted by CIGIDEN (Centro de Investigación para la Gestión Integrada de Riesgos de Desastres) titled “Mapa de Daños y Análisis de Eventos Hidrometeorológicos” provides valuable insights into flood risk in the Metropolitan 27egión of Santiago de Chile. The study identifies 151 flood points resulting from rain-induced flooding, categorized into three groups:

- High Number of Significant Damage Flooding Points: Areas experiencing frequent and severe flooding, resulting in significant damage to property and infrastructure.

- Recurrent High Damage Flooding Points: Locations subject to recurring flooding events causing substantial damage over time.

- High-Density Flooding Points: Areas with high population density, exacerbating the impacts of flooding on residents and communities.

By integrating the findings of the CIGIDEN study with topographical data, is possible identify priority areas for MAR implementation. Targeting MAR projects in high-risk flood zones can help mitigate flood impacts while replenishing groundwater reserves and enhancing water security.

Case Study: MAR Implementation in Santiago de Chile: Drawing on existing research and case studies, we explore potential MAR interventions in Santiago de Chile. By considering topographical features such as elevation, slope, and drainage patterns, planners can identify suitable sites for MAR infrastructure. For example, low-lying areas prone to flooding can be targeted for infiltration basins or recharge wells, allowing excess surface water to percolate into the ground and replenish aquifers.

The book “The urbanism of landscape” proposes evolving role of landscape architecture in response to changing urban conditions, including economic factors and population density. The authors argue that landscape architecture offers innovative solutions for addressing urban challenges and enhancing the quality of life in cities[19].

In the same line is the book “The Landscape Urbanism Reader”. It provides insights into why landscape architecture plays a crucial role in urban design, especially in response to evolving economic and demographic factors, and its significance in contemporary urban planning practices[20].

Another interesting reference that involves the importance of landscape architecture in urban design is considering evolving factors it’s important to identify who uses urban space the most and has the most impact on the city’s size. This helps allocate responsibilities for improving the ecosystem. By understanding which sectors like businesses, factories, homes, and public areas shape urban growth, we can focus on creating eco-friendly infrastructure to reduce their environmental impact and support the ecosystem’s health.

3.1 Methodology categories.

The urban system is shaped by foundational pillars that guide its development. In our analysis, we've identified four primary pillars intersecting across various datasets pivotal to urban development.

1. Flood Areas in Topography: These are regions within the city prone to flooding due to their topographical features.

2. Density Areas – Population and Housing: These areas exhibit high concentrations of both population and housing units.

- Data Collection: Acquire population density data for the studied communes in Chilean national official data.

- Population Density: Reflects the number of people per unit area.

- Housing Density: Represents the number of housing units per unit area.

3. Industrial and Commercial Zones: These zones are hubs for manufacturing, retail, and business activities, impacting soil quality.

- Data Collection: Gather data on industrial and commercial land use within the communes.

- Mapping in QGIS: Illustrate the locations and extents of these areas.

- Cross-Referencing: Correlate flood-prone and densely populated areas with industrial and commercial zones to pinpoint potential pollution sources or flood vulnerability contributors.

4. Permeable Land Use and Green Infrastructure:

- Permeable Land Use: Areas allowing water infiltration into the soil.

- Green Infrastructure: Natural or semi-natural features offering environmental benefits.

- Data Collection: Acquire data on permeable and impermeable surfaces or materials within the communes.

- Mapping in QGIS: Visualize areas with high permeability, indicating potential sites for green infrastructure.

- Filtering: Employ QGIS to prioritize areas based on permeability scores, aiming to spot locations with high green infrastructure potential.

5. Cross-Referencing and Scoring:

- Integration in QGIS: Merge all mapped layers into a single QGIS project.

- Scoring System: Establish a scoring system based on the mentioned categories.

- Cross-Referencing: Combine scores from each category to spotlight areas with the highest scores, representing prime locations for green infrastructure.

Spotting Best Locations for Green Infrastructure Development

By cross-referencing and analyzing these key factor categories, urban planners and designers can pinpoint optimal locations for green infrastructure development. This integrated approach offers a comprehensive view of the urban landscape, aiding informed decision-making to tackle environmental challenges and elevate urban livability.

These categories define the pillars of the urban system. Integrating topography, density areas, industrial and commercial zones, and permeable land use into urban planning processes is vital for fostering sustainable, resilient, and vibrant cities. Spotting the best locations for green infrastructure development through this collective analysis contributes to crafting environmentally conscious, socially equitable, and economically sustainable urban spaces.

Objective of the Methodology:

The core objective is to spotlight areas with the highest scores post cross-referencing. Through systematic analysis and integration of data in QGIS, this methodology seeks to prioritize locations for green infrastructure development. These high-scoring areas are where green infrastructure can most effectively mitigate flood risks, bolster urban resilience, and champion sustainable growth.

4. TOPOGRAPHY

Refers to the elevation and land relief features of an area, specifically within the communes in Chile. The methodology aims to assess and prioritize communes most affected by floods by integrating topographical, hydrological, and urban infrastructure data in QGIS. Topography is considered alongside other factors such as proximity to water bodies, urban density, and infrastructure resilience to evaluate flood vulnerability.

The source of this information on topography is derived from national Chilean data integrated into the QGIS platform for assessing flood vulnerability. The methodology aims to generate a comprehensive flood vulnerability map based on this data, highlighting areas within the communes that are prone to flooding due to their topographical characteristics. The approach also involves the use of historical flood records, land use, and hydrological characteristics to identify and categorize communes based on their level of flood vulnerability.

The importance of incorporating topographical considerations into MAR planning is supported by academic literature. Gleeson et al. (2012)[21] emphasized the crucial role of topography in determining water distribution and movement in urban environments. They highlighted the significance of analyzing surface runoff pathways and identifying suitable locations for infiltration-based MAR techniques based on terrain characteristics.

5. DENSITY

5.1. Population density is understood by INE (Chilean national statistic center) as the ratio between the number of people living in a territory and its extension, which can be expressed in inhabitants per m2, km2, ha or another unit. For the purposes of the Census, the number of people actually registered in the territory is considered to be inhabitants.

[21] Towards Sustainable Groundwater Use: Setting Long-Term Goals, Backcasting, and Managing Adaptively

For the purposes of this publication, the density of inhabitants per hectare is represented for each block of the districts[22].

Urban density refers to the concentration of population and housing within specific communes in Chile. The methodology aims to identify and categorize communes with the highest population density and housing density using national Chilean data in QGIS. Urban density is understood in terms of both population density (number of individuals per unit area) and housing density (number of housing units per unit area).

5.2. Housing density is understood as the relationship between the number of dwellings that exist in a territory and its extension, which can be expressed in those per m2, km2, ha or another unit. For the purposes of the Census, residence is considered to be the total number of residences actually registered in the territory.

For the purposes of this publication, the density per hectare of each block corresponding to the regional capitals, delimited to their urban areas, is represented.

The source of this information on urban density is the national Chilean data integrated into the QGIS platform. The methodology seeks to develop a scoring system to categorize communes based on their levels of population density and housing density, providing insights into areas where housing and infrastructure demands are particularly high due to dense populations.

6. COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL

Industrial and commercial lands, often found in specific communes or districts, play a pivotal role in urban economies by hosting business activities and manufacturing processes. These areas are vital contributors to the economic vitality of urban areas, driving growth and employment opportunities. However, their predominant use for industrial or commercial purposes can lead to various environmental challenges.

[22] Censo de Población y Vivienda (ine.gob.cl)

In the study of commercial land, the emphasis is on its significant contribution to urban economies. However, the rapid urbanization driven by commercial activities can result in habitat loss, soil sealing, and the creation of increased impervious surfaces, leading to reduced vegetation cover. Such changes often have detrimental ecological impacts, including habitat degradation and increased pollution. Is important to assess out of citated documents in this thesis research that they have an important relevance in the ecological degradation and these ecological consequences, underscoring the need for sustainable practices. To mitigate the environmental footprint of commercial zones, strategies like smart growth principles, infill development, brownfield redevelopment, and sustainable land use practices are recommended.

On the other hand, industrial land is recognized for its crucial role in supporting urban economies through manufacturing activities. Yet, industrial processes are known to generate pollution, waste, and environmental hazards that can harm both the environment and human health. Alarmingly, there's evidence pointing to the disproportionate siting of industrial facilities in marginalized communities, exacerbating environmental injustices and health disparities. Studies and documentation have highlighted these ecological impacts, emphasizing the urgency of implementing measures to safeguard both the environment and public health. To address these challenges, stringent environmental regulations, pollution control measures, and the adoption of cleaner production technologies are recommended.

While industrial and commercial lands are integral to urban economic development, they also pose significant environmental challenges. The dual nature of these areas, serving as economic engines while also being sources of environmental concern, necessitates a balanced approach. Sustainable land use practices, coupled with strict regulations and innovative technologies, are crucial to ensure that these areas contribute positively to urban growth without compromising ecological integrity and public health. The concept of integrating green infrastructure for aquifer recharge within urban environments has garnered attention from researchers and practitioners alike. For instance, studies by Egerer (2024)[23] emphasize the importance of strategically locating green spaces within urban areas to enhance groundwater recharge rates and mitigate urban flooding risks. Similarly, research by Dhote and Dixit (2018)[24] highlights “the role of permeable surfaces and green spaces in promoting infiltration and groundwater replenishment”.

In the context of Santiago, Chile, where urbanization and land use dynamics pose challenges to water resource management, there is a pressing need to identify areas capable of supporting green infrastructure interventions for aquifer recharge. By employing mapping techniques, as proposed, to pinpoint locations offering a minimum area of 250 square meters, stakeholders can pinpoint specific sites conducive to implementing green infrastructure projects. This approach aligns with the findings of studies such as those by Hobbins et al. (2019)[25], which emphasize the importance of site-specific planning and targeted interventions for effective aquifer recharge in urban environments.

Moreover, the identification and designation of buffer zone areas within urban landscapes, utilizing active materials and open spaces, can serve as critical components in augmenting the capacity for aquifer recharge. Such buffer zones, as advocated by Bhattacharya et al. (2020)[26], can act as transitional areas between built-up zones and natural environments, facilitating groundwater infiltration and fostering ecosystem resilience.

7. PERMEABLE ACTIVE MATERIAL

Permeable active material refers to land or surfaces that have the capability to allow water infiltration and support vegetation growth. In the context of the provided text, this material is identified and categorized using QGIS based on its ability to facilitate green infrastructure development. The analysis distinguishes between areas with permeable active material, which can support vegetation and water infiltration, and inactive material, which cannot.

The use of QGIS in processing land use data and scoring classifications to identify areas with permeable active material. This approach aims to highlight potential sites suitable for green infrastructure initiatives, focusing on areas that can support vegetation and water infiltration. In conclusion, by exploring the principles of Mixed Land Use, Open Space availability, and Active Material permeability, and informed by academic insights, the proposed mapping initiative in Santiago holds promise for identifying key areas suitable for implementing green infrastructure projects aimed at aquifer recharge. “Through strategic planning and collaborative efforts, these initiatives can contribute to enhancing urban water resilience and sustainable resource management."

One of the most remarkable permeable active material is the two green areas inside of the dense build space, the Parque Metropolitano and Parque Forestal.

8. PROPOSAL: GUIDELINE

Create an Excel guideline using national statistical data and QGIS to identify optimal locations within urban areas for implementing green infrastructure, specifically focusing on MAR (Managed Aquifer Recharge), with the goal of enhancing water resource management and promoting sustainable urban development.

In specific create a quantitative methodology in the format of a guideline created in Excel, which can be applied using the same logic in QGIS and with national data. Became the key to a line in categories the different areas and sub areas involve to create a city, and QGIS the tool the cross this massive information into a condense result.

To further develop the idea, each category selected within the Excel guideline will be assigned a scoring system. This scoring system will be based on specific criteria relevant to the effectiveness and suitability of green infrastructure implementation for MAR in urban areas. For example, criteria for scoring urban density may include proximity to existing infrastructure, population density, and land use compatibility. Similarly, scoring for elevation topography data may consider factor of areas in constant risk of flood or huge damage in the past years out of floods.

Once each category is assigned a score based on the established criteria, these scores will be summarized and integrated into a filter table within QGIS maps. This filter table will serve as a tool to identify potential spots indicating optimal locations for the development of MAR technology. By applying filters based on the scores derived from the Excel guideline, the QGIS map will highlight areas with the highest cumulative scores, indicating their suitability for green infrastructure implementation.

Furthermore, the use of QGIS technology in conjunction with the scoring system allows for the visualization of spatial data, enabling urban planners and policymakers to identify and prioritize areas that offer the best potential spots for enhancing water resource management through MAR technology. This integrated approach streamlines the decision-making process by providing actionable insights derived from the analysis of multiple datasets and criteria.

In summary, the scoring system applied within the Excel guideline, coupled with the filter table in QGIS maps, offers a systematic approach to identifying optimal locations for the development of MAR technology within urban areas. This integrated methodology empowers stakeholders to make informed decisions that support sustainable urban development and enhance water resource management.

In a complementary idea, this thesis proposes to enrich the level of integration of urban planning project Landscape architecture, focused in water management and aquifer recharge, to promote resilience cities, trying to conciliate the broken relationship between urban development and ecosystem resilience.

To support this idea, we propose integrate pertinent entities, including population density, analyze factors of damage, land use, etc. To comprehend the holistic “whole” of a city. This involves acknowledging the significance of integrate, synchronize and fostering understanding, highlighting that engaging in future building efforts without considering ecological harmony (even only for human gain) is unsustainable.

Data and processing tools data

Use of QGIS and national statistic date and guideline methodology: the National Statistics Institute (Instituto Nacional de Estadísticas or INE) in Chile plays an Important role in providing trustful and accurate statistical data for various purposes including policy-making, research, and planning. QGIS (Quantum Geographic Information System) is a powerful open-source software used for analyzing and visualizing spatial data. The relevance of INE’s processed data in conjunction with QGIS lies in their combined ability to provide comprehensive insights into geographic patterns, socio-economic trends, and demographic characteristics, which are essential for informed decision-making and evidence-based policy formulation.

One important aspect of the relationship between INE and QGIS is the use of the designed guideline to process the data and interpret it. By following the methodology outlined in the guideline, users can ensure consistency and accuracy in data processing and analysis, thereby enhancing the reliability and validity of the results.

Another aspect of the relationship between INE and QGIS is the integration of statistical data with spatial information. By utilizing QGIS, users can overlay and analyze INE’s data within geographical contexts, facilitating a deeper understanding of spatial relationships and distributions. For example, demographic data such as population density or income levels can be mapped and visualized alongside geographic features like land use or infrastructure, enabling stakeholders to identify disparities, assess needs, and formulate targeted interventions effectively.

Moreover, the integration of INE's reliable statistical data with QGIS contributes to building trust and credibility in the generated insights and findings. The transparent and replicable nature of both the statistical processes employed by INE and the spatial analysis conducted using QGIS enhances the robustness and validity of the results, thereby fostering confidence among decision-makers, researchers, and the general public in the accuracy and reliability of the data-driven information produced.

Academic references can further support the significance of integrating statistical data from institutions like INE with spatial analysis tools like QGIS. Studies focusing on the application of geospatial techniques in socio-economic analysis, urban planning, environmental management, and public health often emphasize the importance of utilizing high-quality statistical data for meaningful interpretation and decision-making. Additionally, research that examines the use of open-source software like QGIS for spatial analysis and visualization underscores its accessibility, versatility, and utility in harnessing statistical data for diverse applications.[27],[28]

9. RESULTS

The results presented below stem from a sequential application of filtering categories in QGIS. Initially, the focus was on assessing the topography and flooding levels of communes (districts) and their subsequent impact on the urban and social structure of the city. Following this, the analysis shifted towards evaluating the impact on the population by measuring the density of green infrastructure in relation to both population and housing density.

Proposal guideline in QGIS maps results:

The process results in a coherent methodology that begins with creating a guideline and utilizing QGIS for mapping. The initial step involves feeding a base map and an attribute table with the established guidelines. Subsequently, the information undergoes cross-referencing to ensure accuracy and reliability.

1. The first filtering stage focuses on topography values, identifying areas based on their elevation, slope, and flood risk to understand the landscape's natural features. Following this, the process filters areas by density values, evaluating population and housing density to grasp the urban fabric's intensity.

2. Further refinement involves pinpointing commercial and industrial areas, recognizing their spatial footprint and impact on the urban environment. This step helps understand the economic activities' concentration and their influence on land use patterns.

3. Lastly, the localization of permeable active material areas is conducted based on specific values. These areas, vital for green infrastructure development due to their ability to support vegetation and water infiltration, are identified and prioritized. The values in permeable active material are divided by score, max score for public area, lower private agricultural area. This comprehensive approach ensures a strategic and informed method to urban planning and green infrastructure development.

4. Download the attribute table feed with data and process it to create graphs and charts informative date.

In summary, guideline involved a step-by-step approach using QGIS to filter and analyze various categories, starting with topography and flooding, followed by population impact assessment, industrial and commercial land use analysis, and identification of areas suitable for green infrastructure development based on permeability.

Data integration protocol:

The Excel guideline is fed by QGIS attribute table information, which in turn is fill with national statistical data, these names reflect the process of integrating various data sources into a cohesive and usable format.

To interpretate the large amount of data processed in the guideline charts complement the process of interpreting maps results. This chart shows the maximum values for each category on top of the list, in the axis “Y” the districts (communes) and in the axis “X’, the scores. At the case of axis “X” filled with all de data into polygons its 17.200 figures in the list to be processed and filtered. At axis “X” between categories, scores, and total summatory of scores it contains 18 columns.

The large bars in the charts are in base of number of categories select in the excel column by maximum score.

Step by step:

The map is used as a basis, showing Chile's land use, and is complemented by a "clip" featuring two distinct borders: a regional boundary and a communal (district) boundary. The regional boundary is aligned with the Metropolitan region of Santiago, while the communal boundary is defined by the 32 districts within Santiago. [29]

These districts are detailed as follows:

- Santiago

In the guideline framework, the districts correspond to the "X" axis, while the categories are represented on the "Y" axis. A value is assigned to each category, derived from various national data sources, resulting in distinct density categories. These densities may reflect points of flooding per commune, population density, or housing density. This data is integrated into the guideline's attribute table, reflecting the "Y" axis logic. By establishing a singular value across both tables, all category lists can be effectively matched.[30]

TOPOGRAPHY

In QGIS, the topography of the capital was analyzed by considering the recurrent points of floods in relation to elevation, concentrations of flood points, waterways, and water bodies. Managed aquifer recharge (MAR) strategies through green infrastructure initiatives are significantly influenced by topographical considerations in urban environments. Natural landscape features such as elevation, slope, and drainage patterns are taken into account by urban planners when designing MAR systems to optimize water retention, infiltration, and groundwater recharge. This approach enhances water availability, mitigates flooding impacts, contributes to groundwater sustainability, and fosters resilience to climate change.

Flood density:

Density flooding points and damage

The topography results: Highlight in light brown color the communes affected by "High Density Flooding Points." These communes concentrate a significant number of floods, as indicated by Cigiden's data. They are predominantly located in the southern part of the capital.

The communes "High Density Flooding Points" include San Ramón, San Miguel, Pedro Aguirre Cerda, Maipú, Lo Espejo, Lo Prado, La Cisterna, La Florida, El Bosque, Estación Central, Santiago, and Cerrillos.

All these communes were categorized with a score of 1. However, Maipú received a score of 2 due to its "High Number of Significant Damage Flooding Points," and Estación Central also scored 2 as it is affected by "Recurrent High Damage Flooding Points." Communes not listed were categorized with a score of 0.

This filtering approach aims to prioritize solutions in areas where flooding damage is both recurrent and severe. Consequently, the filter highlighted Maipú and Estación Central as areas requiring urgent attention.

Density.

In terms of density analysis, the focus is on understanding the concentration of human settlements and housing units per square kilometer in urban areas. Divided into population density and housing density, these metrics provide crucial insights into urban dynamics and guide policy interventions. Higher population densities indicate a broader reach and potential influence of green infrastructure projects, while higher housing densities often correlate with limited access to green spaces, compromising residents' quality of life.

The identification of communes with the highest population and housing densities is crucial for urban planning and policy formulation. Data from the National Institute of Statistics (INE) of Chile facilitates an in-depth analysis of urban density patterns. Thematic mapping and segmentation of data based on established intervals enable the categorization of communes into distinct density levels, facilitating targeted interventions and policy prioritization.

Based on INE data for the year 2017, four communes with the highest population and housing densities in Santiago, Chile, have been identified in the broader scale of the region and in comparison, with the first filter of topography. These communes, characterized by significant concentrations of inhabitants and housing units, require targeted interventions to address environmental inequities and enhance urban livability.

Abstract conclusion:

Mapping in QGIS Santiago Density → Population / Housing / Per square → Detect communes with high density area (Square). →

→ Cross reference

Population density:

Density population per district

Density Population Results: The map showcases population density using a gradient from degraded red for the lowest rates to deep red for the highest. This color scheme aligns with the five categories defined by Chilean national statistics. These categories are represented on maps through polygons, which score based on total density per district or commune. The districts with the highest population density include Santiago, Recoleta, San Joaquin, and San Ramon. When cross-referenced with flood density, Maipu and Estacion Central fall into an intermediate population density category. While population density isn't the primary filter, it offers valuable insights. Understanding this density relative to other categories informs future project approaches, highlighting areas where high population and flood density intersect.

Housing density

Housing Density Results: The map displays housing density using a color gradient, ranging from degraded blue for the lowest rates to deep blue for the highest. This gradient aligns with the five categories established by Chilean national statistics. These categories are depicted on maps using polygons that score based on the total housing density per district or commune. Districts with the highest housing density are Santiago, Estacion Central, Recoleta, Independencia, and San Miguel.

When we consider flood and population densities, Estacion Central emerges as a key area with high housing density, high flood density, and intermediate population density. Housing density, being the second filter among 32, provides essential insights. It highlights the challenging living conditions people face due to flood and density issues, underscoring the urgent need for solutions in these high-density areas.

Industrial commercial.

In the framework of Mixed Land Use, where urban areas integrate diverse functions including residential, commercial, and industrial activities, coupled with the presence of Open Space characterized by non-covered land, and Active Material possessing permeability to water, there exists a significant opportunity to leverage these elements for the development of aquifer recharge through green infrastructure initiatives.

Abstract conclusion:

Mapping in QGIS Santiago Land use ⟶ Mixed Land Use ⟶ Industrial, commercial land

Urban Area

Industrial and commercial land use: After filtering for flooding, population density, and housing, resulting in Estacion Central as a significant area, it's equally important to consider factors contributing to soil degradation, aquifer depletion, and ecosystem degradation. Industrial and commercial sectors are generally major contributors to these issues. The top-ranking districts for industrial and commercial land use are Pudahuel, Quilicura, Maipu, Las Condes, and Estacion Central, in that order.

It's noteworthy that Estacion Central is surrounded by districts that rank high in these categories. Although the analysis is conducted by district, soil degradation is a concern that transcends boundaries.

Estacion Central holds a notable position concerning the number of polygons with extensive industrial and commercial areas, ranking fifth. This underscores the need for targeted interventions to address the environmental impacts associated with industrial and commercial activities in these areas.

Permeable active material.

Open Space characterized by non-covered land, and Active Material possessing permeability to water, there exists a significant opportunity to leverage these elements for the development of aquifer recharge through green infrastructure initiatives.

Moreover, the identification and designation of buffer zone areas within urban landscapes, utilizing active materials and open spaces, can serve as critical components in augmenting the capacity for aquifer recharge.

ABSTRACT CONCLUSION

Mapping in QGIS Santiago Land use → Mixed Land Use → Open Space: Active Material.

Urban Area

Permeable active material

Permeable active material: After finish the process of filter categories flooding, population, housing density, and industrial and commercial areas, Estacion Central appears as a significant zone. After all, identifying these areas, it's crucial to pinpoint where are located opportunities for a change and how public policies can drive transformation. Areas marked in deep green indicate active material zones, where mostly are characterized as publicly owned.

Leading the list in public active material land use are Maipu, Nunoa, Las Condes, Pudahuel, and La Florida, in that sequence. Estacion Central, our focal district, ranks mid-way with roughly 500 polygons denoting active material from public data. This placement implies that while Estacion Central isn't the most affected, it still houses a considerable amount of active material demanding attention and strategic management.

Summarizing the evaluation.

Result high maximum values in categories filtered: The following maps display the results of applying the maximum values across all parameters, resulting in a zoomed-in view.

From the group of maps filtered based on the criterion of maximum value for each category, we can infer the following coherent observations:

- The concentration of severe damages is located in the central and southwest areas of the metropolitan region.

- The population density is widespread but tends to be higher in the western part of the capital.

- Housing density shows general focal points with a concentration in the central area.

- Industrial and commercial areas are predominantly concentrated on the western side of the capital.

- Permeable active materials are found in the northeast and southwest zones.

- The northeast area of the capital has low flood density, low housing density, low industrial and commercial zone density, low to medium population density, and high permeable active material density.

Selected district to green infrastructure implementation

Estación central, highlighted in yellow on the map, is identified based on the guideline applied to district categories. Situated in the central-west area of the capital, this selected district results from two main filters: flood damage and housing density. It marks areas with significant water accumulation on the land map, indicating a high percentage of associated damage. This is also a crucial factor to consider given the high housing density and the number of people impacted by these conditions.

Summarization of all categories high values filtered in one district.

From the map and its polygons, we can observe that one branch of the river appears disconnected from any other river source. It meets another branch of the river, separated by a populated area surrounded by concentrated commercial, industrial, and housing zones. On a larger scale, these areas are densely built with a low representation of green or permeable areas compared to non-permeable ones.

Steps to get into results.

In our integrated approach to filtering values, we begin by identifying areas prone to water accumulation from rainfall or mountainous snowmelt. This methodical approach prioritizes topographical considerations, laying the foundation for our analysis. Subsequently, we cross-reference this topographical data with its societal impact. Areas with high population and housing density are more vulnerable to flood-related issues, magnifying the societal impact. Understanding this, it becomes imperative to craft democratic policies tailored to these regions.

Following this, we factor in the size of the commune and the footprint of the commercial and industrial sectors. This step is crucial in addressing the negative ecological and societal repercussions. By assessing the commercial and industrial activities' influence on land, we can better comprehend and mitigate their adverse impacts on both the ecosystem and the populace.

Finally, we spotlight public areas with permeable active material deemed suitable for green infrastructure development. This targeted approach ensures the implementation of green infrastructure where it's most needed, harmonizing urban development with environmental sustainability.

Despite being disconnected, there are scattered patches of permeable active material (figure 18). These could be considered as a separate study material in the project to explore their potential to serve as green corridors, enhancing the possibility of developing a comprehensive green infrastructure system.

10. DISCUSSION

10.1. Key findings: The key findings of the study prove that integrating this guideline into topographical, hydrological, and urban infrastructure official national data in QGIS provide valuable insights into flood-propense areas and urban density patterns in Chilean communes that can lead to spot green infrastructure location.

1. Topography and flooding: The analysis effectively identifies communes most susceptible to floods by considering elevation, proximity to water bodies, and infrastructure resilience. This highlights areas urgently needing flood management and mitigation measures.

2. Urban density: The study successfully categorizes communes based on population and housing density, revealing areas with high urbanization pressure. This understanding is crucial for targeted interventions and equitable urban development.

3. Commercial and industrial impact: The research underscores the significant ecological impact of commercial and industrial activities, such as habitat loss, pollution, and soil sealing. Strategies to mitigate these impacts, including sustainable land use practices, are emphasized.

4. Permeable active material: The identification of areas with permeable active material using QGIS assists in pinpointing locations suitable for green infrastructure development. This is crucial for fostering environmental sustainability and enrich aquifer recharge.

5. Data integration guide: The Excel guideline, fed by the QGIS attribute table populated with national statistical data, serves as a comprehensive tool for data integration. This facilitates informed decision-making in urban planning and green infrastructure development.

The study highlights how important is integrate spatial analysis in understanding and addressing urban difficulties, from flood vulnerability to urban density and environmental impact. The findings put in evidence the need for targeted interventions, policy formulation, and community engagement to foster sustainable and resilient urban development in Chile.

10.2. Limitations of the study: While the study provides valuable insights into urban challenges and opportunities in Chilean communes, there are some limitations that should be acknowledged:

1. Data limitations: The study relies heavily on national statistical data and may be limited by the availability and timeliness of this data. Incomplete or outdated information could impact the validity of the findings.

2. Scale and resolution: The scale at which the analysis is conducted may not capture localized variations or nuances within communes. Higher resolution data could provide more detailed insights but might not always be available.

3. Generalization: The findings, while informative at the commune level, may not be directly applicable to smaller administrative units or neighborhoods within the communes.

4. Model assumptions: The methodology used to integrate and analyze data in QGIS involves certain assumptions and simplifications. These assumptions could influence the results and may not fully capture the complexity of urban systems.

5. Temporal factors: Urban landscapes are dynamic, and changes over time could influence the study's findings. The static nature of the data used may not account for future developments or shifts in urbanization patterns.

6. Social and cultural Factors: The study primarily focuses on physical and environmental aspects and may not fully consider social and cultural factors that influence urban development and community needs.

7. Policy and implementation: While the study identifies areas in need of intervention, it does not delve into the feasibility or effectiveness of specific policies or interventions. Implementation challenges, stakeholder engagement, and governance issues are beyond the scope of this study.

8. Technology Constraints: Reliance on QGIS and Excel for data processing and analysis may limit the complexity and scale of the study. Deeper spatial analysis tools or modeling software could offer more sophisticated insights but may require additional expertise and resources.

Acknowledging these limitations is essential for interpreting the study's findings appropriately and guiding future research and policy initiatives.

11. GUIDE

11.1. Guide: The results of the study align with other findings in the field, reinforcing the importance of integrated spatial analysis and sustainable urban development strategies with the objective of manage aquifer recharge.

1. Topography and flooding: Our findings resonate with previous research highlighting the significance of topographical factors in flood vulnerability assessment. Studies have consistently shown that elevation, proximity to water bodies, and infrastructure resilience are critical determinants of flood risk, underscoring the importance of targeted flood management and mitigation measures.

2*. Urban density*: The identification of areas with high population and housing density aligns with broader urbanization trends observed in Chile and globally. Rapid urbanization and population growth are putting increasing pressure on urban infrastructure and services, emphasizing the need for effective urban planning and equitable development strategies.

3*. Commercial and industrial impact*: The ecological impacts of commercial and industrial activities identified in our study corroborate findings from environmental impact assessments and ecological studies. Habitat loss, pollution, and soil sealing are well-documented consequences of unchecked urbanization and industrialization, highlighting the urgent need for sustainable land use practices.

4. Permeable active material: Our focus on permeable active material in identifying suitable locations for green infrastructure development aligns with the growing emphasis on nature-based solutions in urban planning and environmental management. Previous research has highlighted the role of green infrastructure in mitigating urban heat island effects, improving water quality, and enhancing urban biodiversity.

5. Data integration and technology: The use of QGIS and national statistical data in our study reflects broader trends in geospatial analysis and data-driven decision-making. Integrating diverse datasets and leveraging advanced spatial analysis tools are becoming increasingly important for addressing complex urban challenges and informing evidence-based policy formulation.

Implementation suggestions.

Based on the main results and conclusions of this study, here are some suggestions in terms of green infrastructure possibilities:

Green Infrastructure possibilities:

1. Green corridors: Probably this is the most accurate possibility for this area. Given the scattered patches of permeable active material identified, these could be developed into green corridors. Connecting these patches through green corridors could unify them and enhance their functionality. These corridors can serve as pathways for biodiversity, facilitate aquifer recharge, and act as recreational spaces for residents.

2. Permeable surfaces for Aquifer Recharge: Utilizing permeable active material in urban areas can contribute in recharging aquifers. Implementing permeable pavements, green roofs, and rain gardens can help in capturing and infiltrating rainwater, replenishing groundwater levels, and reducing runoff.

3. Nature-Based solutions: Integrating nature-based solutions, such as green roofs, urban forests, and wetlands, can help mitigate the urban heat island effect, improve air quality, and enhance urban biodiversity.

5. Green infrastructure for flood mitigation: Implementing green infrastructure, such as bioswales, retention ponds, and floodplains, can help manage stormwater runoff and reduce flood risks. These green infrastructure elements can be strategically placed in areas identified as vulnerable to flooding, complementing traditional flood management measures.

The geospatial analysis conducted in this study offers valuable insights into the urban landscape of Santiago de Chile communes. The findings highlight areas vulnerable to flooding, patterns of urban density, and the ecological impacts of land use, particularly in commercial and industrial sectors. Additionally, the identification of areas suitable for green infrastructure presents opportunities for nature-based solutions to enhance urban resilience. These key results provide a foundation for informed decision-making by policymakers and stakeholders, emphasizing the importance of sustainable urban planning and environmental stewardship. Future research and policy initiatives can build upon these findings to foster more resilient, inclusive, and sustainable urban environments in Chile.

11.2. Future research: Identify urban challenges and opportunities. Some aspects for future investigation include:

1. Long-term flood risk assessment: Conducting longitudinal studies to monitor changes in flood vulnerability over time can provide valuable insights into the effectiveness of flood management and mitigation measures. This could involve analyzing historical flood data, land use changes, and infrastructure developments to refine flood risk models and inform adaptive strategies.

2. Socio-economic impact analysis: Investigating the socio-economic implications of urban density, land use patterns, and green infrastructure development can help understand how these factors affect local communities' well-being, livelihoods, and quality of life. This could involve surveys, interviews, or case studies to capture the perspectives and experiences of residents in different communes.

3. Green infrastructure performance evaluation: Assessing the performance and effectiveness of implemented green infrastructure projects in terms of environmental benefits, such as improved water quality, urban cooling, and biodiversity enhancement, can provide valuable feedback for future projects. This could involve monitoring and evaluation studies using environmental indicators and performance metrics.

4. Technology and innovation: Exploring the potential of emerging technologies, such as remote sensing, machine learning, and blockchain, in enhancing urban planning, data analysis, and stakeholder engagement can open up new possibilities for addressing urban challenges. Research could focus on developing and testing innovative tools and methodologies for more efficient and effective urban management.

5. Policy and governance: Investigating the role of policy frameworks, governance structures, and stakeholder engagement mechanisms in facilitating or hindering sustainable urban development can help identify best practices and policy recommendations. Comparative studies across different regions or countries can offer insights into transferable lessons and approaches.

6. Community engagement and Capacity Building: Exploring strategies to enhance community engagement, participation, and capacity building in urban planning and green infrastructure development can foster local ownership and support for sustainable initiatives. Action research or participatory approaches could be employed to co-create solutions with communities and stakeholders.

By addressing these research gaps and exploring these future directions, scholars, policymakers, and practitioners can continue to advance the field of urban planning, environmental management, and sustainable development, contributing to the creation of more resilient, inclusive, and sustainable cities.

11.3. Insights and threats

The insights gained from the geospatial analysis provide valuable information that can be applied to various aspects of urban planning, policy-making, and sustainable development in Chilean communes.

Insights:

1. Targeted flood management: Understanding areas vulnerable to flooding allows for the development of targeted flood management and mitigation strategies. By focusing resources and efforts on high-risk areas, communities can better prepare for and respond to flooding events, reducing potential damage and enhancing resilience.

2. Equitable urban development: Identifying areas with high population and housing density highlights the need for equitable urban development strategies. This insight can guide infrastructure planning, housing policies, and resource allocation to ensure that all residents have access to essential services and amenities.

3. Promotion of green infrastructure: Recognizing areas suitable for green infrastructure development offers opportunities to enhance urban green spaces, improve water management, and mitigate the urban heat island effect. Nature-based solutions can contribute to environmental sustainability, biodiversity conservation, and community well-being.

11.1. Threats to Applicability:

1. Resource constraints: Implementing the identified strategies and interventions may require significant financial, human, and technological resources. Limited resources could hinder the effective implementation of recommended actions, especially in communities with limited funding or expertise.

2. Policy and governance challenges: The adoption of sustainable and resilient urban development policies may face challenges due to bureaucratic processes, political interests, or lack of awareness and support from stakeholders. Overcoming these barriers requires strong political will, effective governance, and stakeholder engagement.

3. Environmental and social factors: Changes in environmental conditions, such as climate change impacts, and social factors, such as population growth or demographic shifts, can influence the effectiveness and applicability of the identified strategies over time. Flexibility and adaptability in planning and implementation are essential to address these dynamic challenges.

In summary, while the insights gained from the geospatial analysis offer promising opportunities for enhancing urban resilience and sustainability, there are potential threats and challenges to their applicability. Addressing these challenges requires collaborative efforts, innovative solutions, and adaptive strategies to ensure the long-term success and impact of the identified interventions in Chilean communes.

12. Conclusion

The study's findings offer a comprehensive understanding of the complex urban landscape in Chilean communes, highlighting key factors influencing flood vulnerability, urban density, and land use patterns. The integration of topographical, demographic, and land use data in QGIS has enabled a nuanced analysis that aligns with broader trends in urbanization and environmental impact.

The identification of high-risk flood areas underscores the urgency of targeted flood management strategies, while the mapping of areas with high population and housing density emphasizes the need for equitable urban development and infrastructure planning. Furthermore, the assessment of commercial and industrial impacts on ecosystems reinforces the importance of sustainable land use practices and environmental stewardship.

The focus on permeable active material in identifying potential sites for green infrastructure development for Managed Aquifer Recharge reflects a growing recognition of nature-based solutions in mitigating environmental challenges and enhancing urban resilience.

Overall, the study's results underscore the interconnected nature of urban challenges and the importance of holistic, data-driven approaches to inform policy formulation, resource allocation, and sustainable urban development. By identifying areas in need of intervention and highlighting opportunities for green infrastructure development, this research contributes to ongoing efforts to create more resilient, inclusive, and sustainable urban environments in Chile.

12.1. Summary of Findings: The study's findings reveal significant insights into the urban landscape of Chilean communes, highlighting key factors that influence flood vulnerability, urban density, and land use patterns. Utilizing QGIS and national statistical data, the research identified areas most affected by floods, areas with high population and housing density, and the predominant land uses of commercial and industrial sectors.

1. Flood vulnerability: The study pinpointed communes at high risk of flooding based on topographical, hydrological, and infrastructure data. This identification underscores the need for targeted flood management and mitigation strategies to enhance resilience in flood-prone areas, and give to the project a big inside of locations to develop green infrastructure in base of Managed Aquifer Recharge. This data helps to evaluate the main goal which is to find where is accumulated the water.

2. Urban density: Areas with high population and housing density were mapped, emphasizing the need for equitable urban development, infrastructure planning, and resource allocation to meet the specific needs of densely populated areas. This measures a different level to position the results in its level of impact in society.

3. Commercial and industrial impact: The research assessed the ecological impacts of commercial and industrial activities on urban ecosystems, highlighting the importance of sustainable land use practices and environmental to mitigate negative environmental effects.

4. Green infrastructure potential: The study focused on areas with permeable active material suitable for green infrastructure development. This approach aligns with nature-based solutions to environmental challenges and urban resilience enhancement.

5. Policy and governance implications: The findings emphasize the importance of data-driven approaches in informing policy formulation, resource allocation, and sustainable urban development. The study's results can guide governance bodies in devising policies and allocating resources effectively.

Overall, the study's results underscore the interconnected nature of urban challenges and opportunities in Chilean communes. By identifying areas in need of intervention and highlighting opportunities for green infrastructure development, the research contributes to ongoing efforts to create more resilient, inclusive, and sustainable urban environments.

ABSTRACT

This study aims to develop an inclusive methodology that uses Chilean national statistical data and geographic information system (QGIS) technology to identify the best spots in urban areas for implementing green infrastructure, focusing particularly on Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR). The main goal is to improve water resource management and support sustainable urban development. This information will be cross-referenced and followed by steps outlined in a guideline created in Excel, which can be applied using the same logic in QGIS and with national data.

The proposed methodology in this research utilizes various statistical indicators, insights for the study from official statistical Chilean national institutions which measure urban density, housing density, land use public/private and topography flooding areas. By systematically cross-referencing these datasets, the study aims to provide valuable insights to urban planners and policymakers, helping them strategically place green infrastructure projects to enhance water resource management effectiveness and strengthen resilience in urban areas.

Using this methodology in green infrastructure planning or urban development has the potential to produce diverse outcomes, which can be classified into different impact levels:

1. Increase in water aquifer recharge volume.

2. Evaluation of green infrastructure impacts: Efficiency of purifying water, and secondly, additional benefits like reducing air pollution.

3. Measurement of the percentage impact on the population benefiting from green infrastructure implementations.

This detailed categorization of results is expected to enrich discussions on green infrastructure planning and urban resilience, providing stakeholders with a practical framework for assessing and improving interventions aimed at sustainable urban development.

Impact level detail:

Increase in water aquifer recharge volume: The main goal of this study on Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR) is water storage. It's a crucial pillar for MAR, ensuring long-term water security, resilience against droughts, and sustainable water management.

1. Enhancing Water Security: With global water stress rising due to population growth and climate change, MAR helps by storing water in aquifers. This stored water acts as a reserve during scarcity or emergencies, especially during droughts.

2. Building Resilience Against Droughts: Droughts, worsened by climate change, can devastate communities and ecosystems. Aquifer storage buffers against droughts, providing water when surface sources are low, helping communities recover faster.

3. Sustainable Water Management: MAR promotes a cyclical approach to water, storing, using, and replenishing it. This reduces reliance on unsustainable groundwater extraction and promotes water reuse.

4. Managing Seasonal Variability: Water availability varies seasonally due to rainfall and evaporation. MAR manages these fluctuations by storing excess water in aquifers during wet periods for use in dry times.

5. Environmental and Ecosystem Benefits: MAR's water storage supports healthy ecosystems and biodiversity, benefiting both people and nature.

This approach ensures efficient water use, balancing today's needs with future sustainability. Additionally, MAR can help in managing stormwater runoff and preventing flooding by directing excess water into aquifers, thereby reducing environmental hazards and enhancing ecosystem resilience[1].

Evaluation of green infrastructure impacts: Efficiency of purifying water, and secondly, additional urban benefits: This part of the Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR) strategy focuses on finding suitable spots to store water, especially in Santiago de Chile's flood-prone areas capable of absorbing water. Soil in these areas can be used to build green infrastructure, like permeable pavements, which help clean and direct stormwater to recharge aquifers.

The middle layer evaluates the impact of green infrastructure on water quality and other benefits like reducing air pollution and improving ecosystems, which all enhance our quality of life. By using national data and Geographic Information Systems (QGIS), we can pinpoint where to place this infrastructure for the most significant impact on water quality and MAR efficiency.

We also assess how well the MAR process cleans water to meet safety standards. This means checking how natural processes like soil filtration remove contaminants from water.

Moreover, green infrastructure helps clean the air by capturing pollutants. QGIS helps us process and understand this data better, aiding decision-making to create healthier urban areas.

Measurement of the percentage impact on the population benefiting from green infrastructure implementations: Assessing the impact of green infrastructure on communities is relevant. By studying national data and Geographic Information Systems (QGIS), we can conduct spatially explicit analyses to pinpoint areas benefiting most from Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR) through green infrastructure. QGIS's capability to integrate multiple data layers facilitates a comprehensive examination of factors like population density, housing distribution, predominant land use, flood-prone zones, and soil suitability for infiltration. By overlaying these datasets, we identify optimal locations for green infrastructure implementation. Subsequently, we estimate the population poised to benefit from improved water management and reduced flood risks. This integrated approach underscores the significance of green infrastructure in enhancing urban water management, MAR, and urban resilience. It emphasizes the need for a spatially informed strategy to target areas and assess the population impact, aligning with the broader objectives of sustainable urban development and effective water resource management.

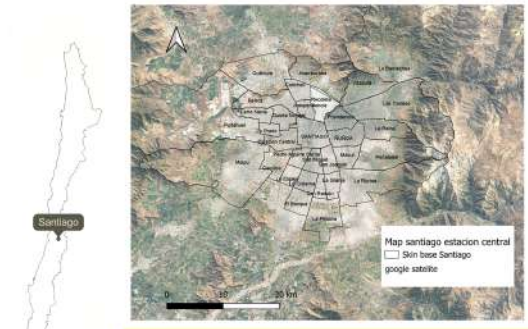
1. RESEARCH



This study introduces a methodology using Chilean national data and QGIS to identify optimal urban locations for green infrastructure, with a focus on Managed Aquifer Recharge (MAR). The aim is to improve water management and promote sustainable urban development. By cross-referencing data from official Chilean institutions on urban and housing density, land use, and topography, the research provides valuable insights for urban planners. This systematic approach aids in strategically placing green infrastructure projects to improve water resource management and achive urban resilience. The methodology is supported by a guideline in Excel, ensuring consistency and applicability across the data sets.

Using this methodology in green infrastructure planning or urban development has the potential to produce diverse outcomes, which can be classified into different impact levels:
1. Increase in water aquifer recharge volume.
2. Evaluation of green infrastructure impacts: Efficiency of purifying water, and secondly, additional benefits like reducing air pollution.
3. Measurement of the percentage impact on the population benefiting from green infrastructure implementations.

2. METHODOLOGY

Data collection involves Processing Chilean national data (categories), mapping them in QGIS, and cross-referencing datasets in base of a guideline. The integrated approach in QGIS aids in prioritizing areas for green infrastructure development, enhancing urban resilience, and supporting sustainable growth.

CATEGORIES

1. Flood Areas in Topography: Districts prone to flooding due to topography.

2. Density – Population and Housing: Areas with high population and housing concentrations.

3. Industrial and Commercial Mapping commercial and industrial use of land to measure soil degradation.

4. Permeable Land Use and Areas allowing water infiltration and offering possibility of environmental benefits.

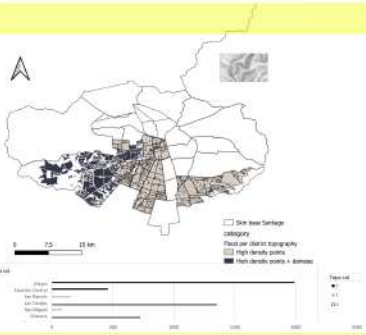
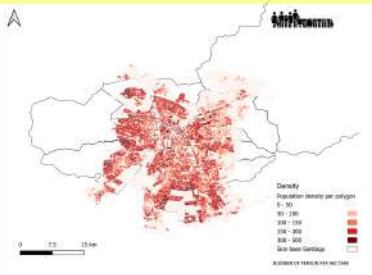
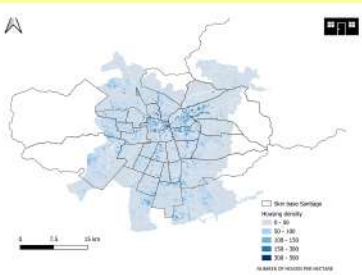
4. GUIDELINE + QGIS`

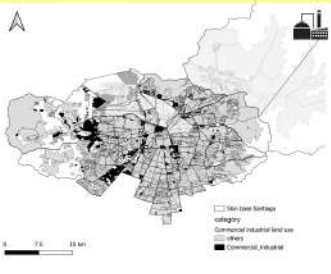
Methodology results
Utilizing QGIS, a sequential filtering method was applied to evaluate topography, flooding levels, and their impact on urban structures in Santiago's districts (communes).
1. Topography & Flooding Analysis:
- Identified areas based on elevation, slope, and flood risk.
- Highlighted communes with high-density flooding points, notably in southern Santiago.
2. Population Impact Assessment:
- Assessed population and housing densities to understand urban fabric intensity.
- Identified communes with high population and housing densities, crucial for policy interventions.
3. Land Use Analysis:
- Identified commercial and industrial areas, pinpointing their spatial footprint.
- Recognized districts with high industrial and commercial land use, such as Pudahuel and Quilicura.
4. Green Infrastructure Identification:
- Located permeable active material areas vital for green infrastructure development.
- Highlighted areas like Maipú and Nunoa as potential zones for green infrastructure.

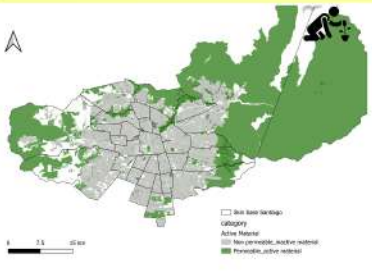


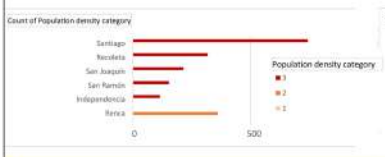
5. RESULTS

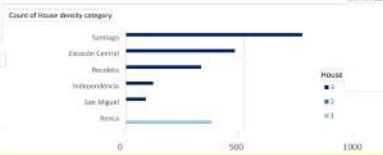


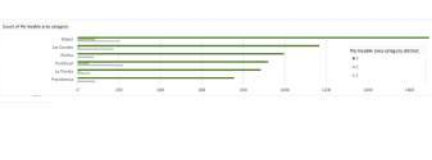












6. FILTERED RESULTS

Analysis of categories results:

Topography: Southern communes as most vulnerable to flooding, with San Ramón, Maipú, and Estación Central among the most affected, particularly due to significant damage.

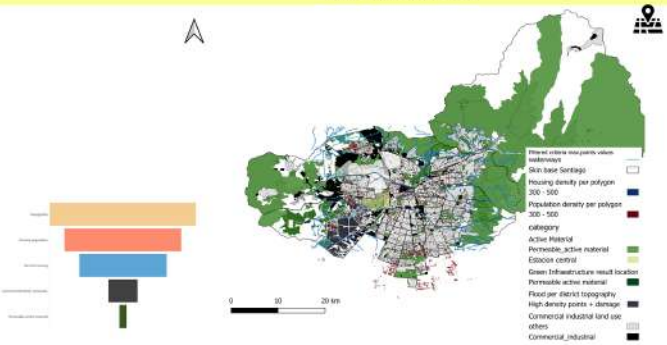
Population density: Reveals high concentrations in Santiago and Recoleta, with Estación Central showing intermediate levels, intersecting with flood density.

Housing density emphasizes Estación Central's challenges, ranking high in both housing and flood density.

Industrial and commercial activities intensify environmental concerns, especially in Estación Central, surrounded by top-ranking areas like Pudahuel and Las Condes.

Leading the list in public active material land use are Maipu, Nunoa, Las Condes, Pudahuel, and La Florida, in that sequence. Estacion Central, our focal district, ranks mid-way with roughly 500 polygons denoting active material from public data. This placement implies that while Estacion Central isn't the most affected, it still houses a considerable amount of active material demanding attention and strategic management.

These findings stress the urgent need for targeted interventions and strategic policy planning in these high-risk and high-density areas.



Analysis of categories filterd out maximum values results:

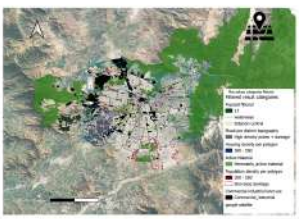
- The concentration of severe damages is located in the central and southwest areas of the metropolitan region.

- The population density is widespread but tends to be higher in the western part of the capital.

- Housing density shows general focal points with a concentration in the central area. - Industrial and commercial areas are predominantly concentrated on the western side of the capital.

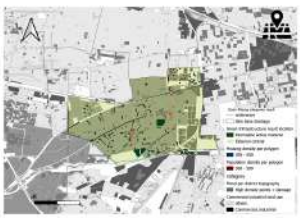
- Permeable active materials are found in dense are at the northeast and southwest zones.

- The northeast area of the capital has low flood density, low housing density, low industrial and commercial zone density, low to medium population density, and high permeable active material density.



The guideline pinpoints flood-prone districts based on topography, highlighting urgent flood management needs. It categorizes areas by urban density, showing high-pressure urbanization zones requiring targeted interventions. The study emphasizes the ecological impacts of commercial and industrial activities and promotes sustainable mitigation strategies. Using QGIS, it identifies permeable zones for green infrastructure development, crucial for environmental sustainability and aquifer recharge. These insights underscore the importance of targeted policies and community engagement for fostering resilient urban development in Chile.

Estación central, highlighted in yellow on the map, is identified based on the guideline applied to district categories. Situated in the central-west area of the capital, this selected district results from two filters: flood damage and housing density. It marks areas with significant water accumulation on the land map, indicating a high percentage of associated damage. This is also a crucial factor to consider given the high housing density and the number of people impacted by these conditions.



From the map and its polygons, we can observe that one branch of the river appears disconnected from any other river source. It meets another branch of the river, separated by a opulated area surrounded by concentrated commercial, industrial, and housing zones. On a larger scale, these areas are densely built with a low representation of green or permeable areas compared to non-permeable ones.

Finally, we spotlight public areas with permeable active material deemed suitable for green infrastructure development. This targeted approach ensures the implementation of green infrastructure where it's most needed, harmonizing urban development with environmental sustainability.

This scattered patches of permeable active material, could be considered as a temptative further study material in the project to explore their potential to serve as green corridors, enhancing the possibility of developing a comprehensive green infrastructure system.
